The Science Behind Moonbows, or Rainbows Seen at Night ...

A moonbow (also known as a lunar rainbow or white rainbow) is a rainbow produced by moonlight rather than direct sunlight. Other than the difference in the light source, its formation is the same as for a solar rainbow: It is caused by the refraction of light in many water droplets, such as a rain shower or a waterfall, and is always positioned in the opposite part of the sky from the moon relative to the observer.

Here’s what we found: A Rainbow is formed when light from the sun passes through raindrops in the atmosphere. Each raindrop acts as a tiny prism and refracts or bends the light into the spectrum of colors we know--red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet. This phenomenon in the earth’s atmosphere is quite common.
