Bridge - Bridge - Roman arch bridges: The Romans began organized bridge building to help their military campaigns. Engineers and skilled workmen formed guilds that were dispatched throughout the empire, and these guilds spread and exchanged building ideas and principles. The Romans also discovered a natural cement, called pozzolana, which they used for piers in rivers.

While traveling around the world, many cameras tend to find their way to scenes of nature accented with an old bridge. There's something haunting and curious about old bridges like the ones in this compilation, perhaps because they remind us of mysterious fairy-tales, giving us a fragile hope that those mystical worlds might just appear at the other end of that bridge.

ancient wisdom was the common heirloom of all mankind, for as yet there had been no abuse of knowledge, and hence no need for schools kept hid and sacred from the world. Truth was freely given and as freely accepted in that golden age. (Cf. H. P. Blavatsky Collected Writings 14:248–9.) The race was young; not all were adept in learning.
