The most important (EDIT: AND UNRELATED TO THE CLUTCH): change the transmission fluids (transmission, differential, transfer case, what have you) regularly (for example, I change my transmission fluid in my Prius at 60k as used oil analysis has shown it is basically shot at this interval, quite unlike the manual which claims something like a 100k interval (if it's even listed, it might not be, haven't looked in a while)...after which point the transmission is well out of warranty, of course ...

Best Practices with a Manual Transmission? : Cartalk

To begin manual driving, it is best to start with a car on a level, flat road. A good rule of thumb to remember before even starting the car is to check the gear shifter or lever: it must be in the neutral (center) position. Another safety rule is to keep the handbrake up while starting the car. Turn the key to start the car.
