There were also medium and long-wheelbase models available with all of these engines. From the mid-1980's until Jeep production was ended in 1998, only diesel engines were available in the J50 series. Like the Mahindras which were built in India into the 2000s, the Mitsubishi Jeeps had a lot of appeal to people wanting a new vehicle with the no-nonsense look of a flat-fender Jeep. This catalogue photo shows some examples from the J20, 30, 40 and 50 series, circa 1970.
